ABSTRACT

This official handbook, distributed during the conference, outlines the framework for themes, speakers, and planning, and identifies people involved in several aspects of the conference. Profiles of the 14 conference speakers are followed by a brief history of the conference and a description of the National Commission on Libraries and Information Science, including a list of members. Conference themes are listed as library and information services for personal needs, lifelong learning, organizations and the professions, governing our society, and for international understanding. Also provided are a list of members of the conference of the information community advisory committee, delegates from each state, and staff and contributors to the conference. (SW)

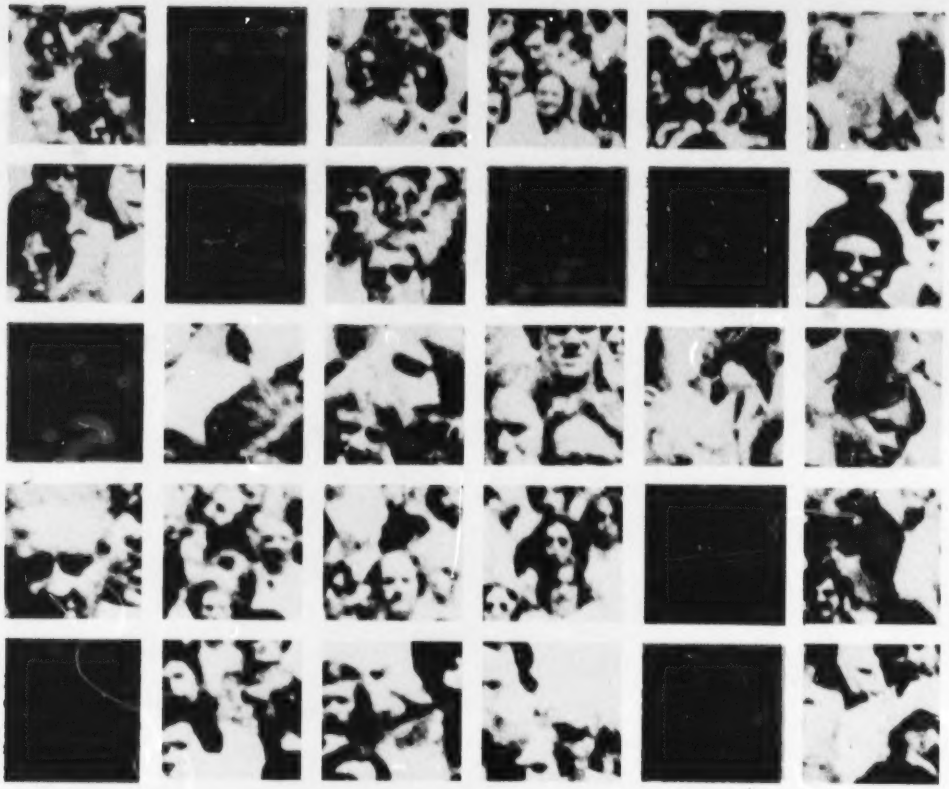
The White House Conference On Library and Information Services

November 15-19 1979



IR008001

Message From The President

Light The Way . . .

I am happy to welcome you to the White House Conference on Library and Information Services. Some of you are professional librarians who are playing an important role in providing knowledge and information to our citizens. More than two-thirds of you come from many other occupations, representing Americans in all fifty States and the Territories. Your work here will guide us toward policies that will improve the quality of our library and information services. You will set goals for the future of these services to ensure that all of our people have equal access to the information they need to live full and effective lives as citizens of a free society.

Information, like the air we breathe, is a national resource. Accurate and useful information is as necessary as oxygen to our health and happiness as individuals and as a Nation. More than half of our gross national product now comes from activity related to information. Information is rapidly replacing manufactured goods as a major commodity in our economy.

It often supplies the vital spark for innovation in our Nation's business, science, law, medicine, government and technology. It lights fires of creative genius and invention and thus helps solve the problems of an increasingly complex world.

Libraries are the storehouses of the best that man has thought and said. They are essential to learning at all levels. In many communities they have become centers for free discussion, widening horizons and enriching the quality of life.

A wise man once said that if you give the people light, they will find their own way. This is your task in this Conference: to help light the way for millions of your fellow Americans and for generations to come. I am pleased that you are gathered here to carry out this important mission, and I look forward to studying your recommendations.

Jimmy Carter

Message from the Chairman

Looking To The Future . . .

There is reason to believe that the 1980's will be known by historians as the Information Decade. A great many events are occurring and trends are evolving as we wrap up 1979. The World Administrative Radio Conference in Geneva is about to reshape some of the technology and international laws involved in the transfer of information. UNESCO is expected to produce what may be a blueprint for future communications worldwide. The movement of computer information across borders is becoming a political issue along with privacy . . . and privacy has become a key issue to Americans.

Meanwhile, cable television, video-cassettes, mini-computers and micro-chips, fiber optics, direct broadcast of television and digital information by satellite will make great inroads in the status quo of communications information delivery. The role and priorities of Library and Information Services in the context of these technological, social and political changes is in no small part what this conference is all about.

The White House Conference, coming at the end of the 70's, is the culmination of the National Commission's first decade. It is the Commission's first operating responsibility. The National Commission on Libraries and Information Science is an independent Federal Agency reporting both to the President and to Congress. This is an unusual, if not unique, role at the Federal level. We are committed to actively implementing the resolutions produced at this Conference.

The Conference has been called together to help shape policy on public access and distribution of information in this country. We are standing on the edge of change, with a mandate to set priorities and recommend the public policy on specific issues. Our responsibility is heightened by the fact that ten years from now they will know that the first Conference on the subject of Library and Information Services took place in Washington this week and offered the opportunity for citizens to chart a course for their own future.

If we can work together to produce viable proposals and guidelines for executive and legislative initiatives; if we can offer direction on ways the many professional and trade associations in education, communications and libraries can cooperate; if we can look to the creation of a citizens' lobby in the public interest to ensure that the work of the Conference is followed through; if we can return to our communities with positive ideas and information, fuel for public forums to keep the issues alive—then we can be proud of the time we spend here, now, ten years from now and ever after that.

Charles Benton
Chairman
National Commission on Libraries and Information Science
Chairman, White House Conference on Library and Information Services

Statement from the Director

The Challenge for Today . . .

In 1908 Theodore Roosevelt convened the first White House Conference. The subject was conservation and natural resources. Since then, some 60 White House Conferences have taken place. Few have had concrete impact on public policy. That is our challenge.

It took 22 years to bring this conference to actuality. At least 100,000 people have been involved thus far; now it is in your hands. You were chosen by democratic vote to represent all 230 million of your fellow citizens. Your work here should reflect the concerns you heard voiced in your own state and territorial meetings. We ask you to remain open enough to listen to your fellow delegates and to our distinguished speakers, learn from what has been assembled in the Information Center and in the preparation materials, and carry the work to the next level—that of producing a set of specific recommendations, after know, for action.

As you know libraries today find themselves between the Scylla of expanding technology and the Charybdis of public resistance to additional tax burdens. There is no question that people want and need the information and knowledge that libraries and information services can provide. The question is, given finite national resources and competing social needs, how can the case for libraries and information services best be made and achieved? Your mission is clear. Let us begin.

Speakers

Herbert D. Benington

Herbert D. Benington is a vice president of The MITRE Corporation, a research and development company with headquarters in Bedford, Massachusetts. For the past twenty years one of the company's major priorities has been the analysis, planning and development of systems aimed at improving library and information services.

Mr. Benington is general manager of the company's Metrek Division which focuses research on systems development for air transportation and for problems involving energy, resources and the environment.

He formerly worked on a wide variety of programs for the U.S. Department of Defense. He was Deputy Director for Plans and Assessment in the Office of the Director of Defense Research and Engineering.

Before he joined the Government in 1963, Mr. Benington worked on computer design and programming for the air defense system. He is a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Herbert D. Benington

James H. Boren

James H. Boren

James H. Boren has entertained audiences in numerous cities in the United States and Canada with his speeches subtly satirizing the language and customs of government bureaucrats. Selfstyled as "the bureaucrat's bureaucrat," he also is an announced candidate for the Vice Presidency of the United States.

Mr. Boren's speeches have struck deeply responsive chords among audiences which have dealt with government agents and agencies. His knowledge of government foibles is gained from direct observation. He once served as an aide to a Member of Congress, and worked several years for the U.S. Department of State. He is the founder and president of the International Association of Professional Bureaucrats.

Although he stresses the humorous aspects of life, he has received several awards for his work on relations between the United States and Latin America. He is a graduate of the University of Texas, where he earned a doctorate in the history and philosophy of education.

Bill Clinton, Governor of Arkansas

Governor Bill Clinton of Arkansas, at 33, is the youngest governor in the United States. Governor Clinton demonstrated outstanding support for libraries and information services, advocating a thirty per cent increase in per capita aid for Arkansas libraries. He also recognized the needs of the state library agency and stressed the role of libraries as an essential aid to learning.

Elected to his present office in 1978, he previously served two years as his state's attorney general. In 1975, he chaired the Housing Development Corporation, a nonprofit organization that promotes housing for persons with low incomes.

A 1973 graduate of Yale Law School, he returned to Arkansas to teach at the University of Arkansas School of Law in Little Rock. He graduated from the Georgetown University School of Foreign Service with a degree in international affairs in 1968 and later attended Oxford University in England as a Rhodes scholar.

Bill Clinton

Frank Fitzmaurice

Frank Fitzmaurice

Frank Fitzmaurice is a specialist in transmitting important information to large national audiences; he is a producer for National Public Radio based in Washington, D.C.

Mr. Fitzmaurice is responsible for producing live public radio coverage of congressional hearings and his programs are broadcast over more than two hundred non-commercial radio stations in the United States. In 1978, he produced thirty-eight days of live radio coverage of the United States Senate debate on the Panama Canal Treaty, the first live broadcast of actual proceedings from the Senate floor. Mr. Fitzmaurice also produces radio broadcasts of White House events.

He has supervised the production of multi-media information programs which combine printed material and audio tapes to present different perspectives on national issues.

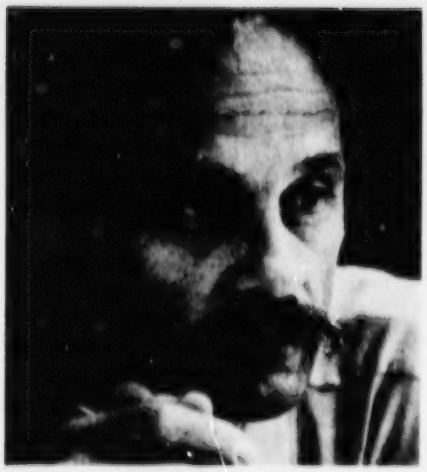
Before he joined National Public Radio in Washington in 1976, Mr. Fitzmaurice worked as a producer for non-commercial stations in Boston and Philadelphia. He is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania.

Nicholas Johnson

Nicholas Johnson is a lawyer, lecturer and writer, who is widely known as a consumer advocate, a critic of the commercial broadcasting industry and an advocate of equal opportunity of access to information.

He is Chairman of the National Citizens Committee for Broadcasting and a former Commissioner of the Federal Communications Commission. Mr. Johnson received the New Republic Public Defender Award in 1970. In the early 1960s he was named Administrator of the U.S. Maritime Administration, the youngest man ever appointed to the position.

Mr. Johnson is the publisher of Access, a magazine devoted to broadcasting reform. He is the author of several books including Broadcasting in America, Test Pattern for Living, and How to Talk Back To Your Television Set. He is a graduate of the University of Texas School of Law.



Nicholas Johnson

Clara S. Jones

Clara S. Jones

Clara S. Jones, the director of the Detroit Public Library from 1970 to 1978, now teaches library science at the University of California at Berkeley.

As director of the Detroit library system, she led the planning, design and operation of an innovative program to tailor library information services to the personal needs of the people of the city. The program is called TIP, an acronym for The Information Place.

Librarians in Detroit provide answers to more than 8,000 inquiries a month about how to get help with problems relating to health, social security, transportation and many other subjects of daily concern. Library specialists from other cities, both in this country and abroad, have visited Detroit to study the program.

Ms. Jones has lectured widely on urban library service and Afro-American literature. She was acting president of the American Library Association from April to July, 1976, and served as president from July, 1976 to June, 1977.

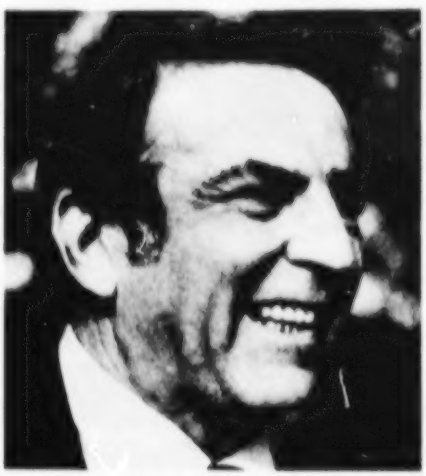
Francis Keppel

Francis Keppel has been in the forefront of learning and education programs for many years. He is Director of the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies where he heads the Program in Education for a Changing World. He also is a Senior Lecturer at the Harvard Graduate School of Education.

Mr. Keppel formerly served as Chairman of the Board of the General Learning Corporation, the educational affiliate of the General Electric Company and Time Incorporated.

In the early 1960s, Mr. Keppel served successively as U.S. Commissioner of Education and as an Assistant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. He was one of the chief legislative architects of the Vocational Education Amendments of 1963. A graduate of Harvard University, he studied sculpture for a year at the American Academy in Rome after he received his bachelor of arts degree.

Francis Keppel



Abner Mikva

Abner Mikva

Judge Mikva is particularly knowledgeable about one of the key issues concerning libraries and information services: the question of the individual's right to privacy versus the public's right to information.

Judge Mikva served as a member of the National Commission on Individual Rights and Privacy which examined this issue in detail.

Before he took the oath of office last September as a Judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, he represented the Tenth Congressional District of Illinois.

Before he was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1968, he taught at the Northwestern University School of Law and served several terms as a state legislator in Illinois. He received his law degree from the University of Chicago Law School and later was a law clerk for U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sherman Minton.

Ralph Nader

Ralph Nader has been at the center of national controversy over consumer rights since he began his campaign for automobile safety in the early 1960s.

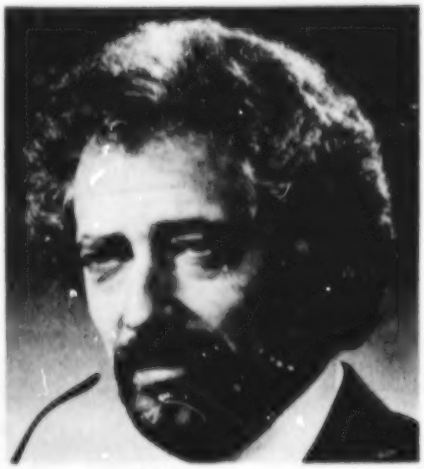
Since then, he has continued to generate debate on issues ranging from the effectiveness of the U.S. Congress to corporate responsibilities.

Mr. Nader has demonstrated an unusual ability to inspire large numbers of talented persons, particularly young people, to work zealously for organizations he has founded or to form militant groups of their own to carry out specialized public interest objectives. He founded the Center for Responsive Law, the Public Interest Research Group, the Center for Auto Safety, and the Project for Corporate Responsibility.

In recent months, Mr. Nader has devoted much of his time to the debate on nuclear reactors, arguing for increasing reliance on alternative sources of power, such as solar energy.

He is the author of several books on consumer issues, including his critique of the automobile industry, Unsafe At Any Speed.

Ralph Nader



Bernard Ostry

Bernard Ostry

Bernard Ostry, Deputy-Minister of the Department of Communications of Canada, has also worked as an author, broadcaster and scholar.

He received several awards for outstanding films while working for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. He has written several books, including The Age of Mackenzie King: The Rise of the Leader, and numerous articles on Canadian social, political and cultural history. He worked as moderator of the program Nightline at CBC in the early 1960s and later was supervisor of the network's department of public affairs for radio and television. He was commissioner of the Prime Minister's Task Force on Government Information from 1969 to 1970. Graduated from the University of Manitoba with a bachelor of arts degree in 1948, he later did postgraduate work in international history at the University of London.

Major R. Owens

New York State Senator Major R. Owens has written articles on the problems of libraries and on finding effective ways of ensuring social justice for members of minority groups. He once served as community coordinator for the Brooklyn Public Library.

Senator Owens worked for two years as Director of the Community Media Librarian Program at Columbia University in New York. The program was designed to train librarians to use all media to reach inner city residents with important practical information.

A State Senator since 1975, he formerly served as the Commissioner of New York City's Community Development Agency. Senator Owens is a member of New York's Black and Puerto Rican Legislative Caucus and the New York State Council of Black Elected Officials. He has received several awards for his work to improve conditions for minority groups.

Senator Owens teaches as an Adjunct Professor of Library Science at Columbia University. He is a graduate of Morehouse College and Atlanta University.

Major R. Owens

Robert B. Pfannkuch

Robert B. Pfannkuch

Robert B. Pfannkuch has concentrated on the effective communication of information during most of his professional career. He is the President of the Bell & Howell Company's Video Group. One major activity of the Video Group is research, testing and development of educational technology.

Mr. Pfannkuch formerly was President of Primary Medical Communications Corporation of New York City. He has worked in the field of video communications since 1963 when he organized Audio Video Industries, a major video systems supplier for the Eastern United States. He also has served as a video consultant for several major corporations.

He has produced eighty television communication seminars for educational and industrial organizations. A graduate of the University of Connecticut, Mr. Pfannkuch is the author of several articles on the industrial use of television.

Edmund M. Reggie

Edmund M. Reggie is Executive Counsel to Governor Edwin W. Edwards of Louisiana. Mr. Reggie once served as Director of Extension and Continuing Education for his state. He has been active in state and national politics for more than twenty years.

Mr. Reggie served as a city judge in Crowley, Louisiana, for about twenty-five years before he retired from the post in 1976. In 1961, President John F. Kennedy named him as a special envoy to the Middle East to discuss that region's representation at the World's Fair held in New York City in 1964 and to inquire into the Palestinian refugee problem.

He also has served as chairman of the State Welfare Board and as a member of the State Mineral Board. He received his law degree from Tulane University School of Law.

Edmund M. Reggie

George R. Schrader

George R. Schrader

George R. Schrader, as city manager of Dallas, Texas, has supported an ambitious program to revitalize the city's center including construction of a new $40 million central library now under way.

He estimates that the city has more than doubled the funds it spends for its library system during the past ten years. Mr. Schrader also has expanded the use of new, advanced management information systems in the city government, using them for financial forecasting and budget management.

He was appointed assistant city manager of Dallas in 1966 and has served as city manager since 1972. He recently was elected president of the International City Management Association.

Mr. Schrader has worked in the field of city management for the past twenty-five years and he has received numerous awards for his professional accomplishments. He is a graduate of the University of Kansas where he received a master of arts degree in public administration.

The White House Conference on Library and Information Services

A History of the Conference

The White House Conference on Library and Information Services was authorized by Public Law 93-568, signed on December 31, 1974, by President Gerald R. Ford after extensive hearings in the U.S. Congress. The law states that the purpose of the Conference is to develop recommendations to improve the Nation's libraries and information centers and their use by the public.

The idea for the Conference gradually gained support and momentum over the course of twenty-two years. Channing Bete Sr., a library trustee from Greenfield, Massachusetts, first suggested it in 1957 at a meeting of the American Library Trustee Association, a division of the American Library Association. Later, the American Library Association itself endorsed the proposal and strongly supported legislation to authorize the Conference. Presidents Lyndon B. Johnson, Richard M. Nixon, Gerald R. Ford and Jimmy Carter all supported the concept.

On May 4, 1977, President Carter signed an appropriations bill which set aside $3.5 million to plan and conduct the Conference under the guidance of the National Commission on Libraries and Information Science, a permanent, independent Federal agency.

In September 1977, the Commission added a small consulting staff to assist the States, the District of Columbia, the United States Territories and American Indians living on or near reservations to conduct pre-White House Conferences.

These conferences were designed to examine the current status of library and information services at the state and local levels and to make recommendations to improve them to meet the needs of the people.

An estimated 100,000 persons, representing a wide variety of lay people, as well as professional librarians, participated in 57 pre-White House Conferences, five theme conferences and other planning sessions during the past two years.

They debated issues, selected approximately 900 delegates and alternates to represent them at the national meeting and adopted more than 3,000 resolutions designed to improve library and information services.

A research staff carefully sifted and analyzed the ideas in these resolutions and used them to structure the five basic Conference themes which are:

Library and Information Services for: 1) personal needs; 2) lifelong learning; 3) organizations and the professions; 4) governing our society; and, 5) international understanding and cooperation.

The legislation authorizing the national meeting directs the Commission to submit to the President within 120 days of the close of the Conference findings and recommendations to improve library and information services. The law also requires the President to send his recommendations to the U.S. Congress within 90 days after he receives the final report.

The National Commission on Libraries and Information Science

The National Commission on Libraries and Information Science (NCLIS) is a permanent, independent agency in the Executive Branch, established by Congress in 1970. The Commission's objectives are to develop and implement national policy on library and information science; to design overall plans to meet library and information needs; and, to coordinate activities at the Federal, state and local level to meet those needs. The bill establishing the Commission was signed into law (P.L. 91-345) on July 20, 1970.

The Commission consists of fifteen members, fourteen of whom are appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the U.S. Senate, to serve staggered five-year terms. The fifteenth member is the Librarian of Congress.

The Commission engages in a wide spectrum of activities to meet its responsibilities, sponsoring important studies as well as conducting conferences, forums and hearings. Its projects have included the National Inventory of Library Needs, Library Photocopying in the United States, the Open Forum on a National Periodicals Center and regional hearings for development of its National Program Document.

The Commission also has organized task forces to study particular problems, such as ensuring effective access and delivery of periodical literature, establishing useful communications among computer systems, and improving communications between the public and private sectors. The Commission also has made its own studies and participated in cooperative ventures with other agencies at the Federal, state and local levels.

Since 1977, the Commission has concentrated much of its attention on planning and coordinating the White House Conference on Library and Information Services. The agency has given extensive help to the States and Territories enabling them to plan and carry out their pre-Conferences. The Commission will give high priority in the future to implementing the recommendations and resolutions resulting from the White House Conference.

The names of some organizations which contributed are missing because of publication deadlines. The Conference staff regrets the omissions.

The White House Conference Information Center

The White House Conference Information Center is a highly sophisticated combination of the most advanced information technology and more than one hundred data bases. The Center enables delegates and other participants in the Conference not only to retrieve information on a multitude of subjects but also to inform themselves quickly of what is occurring in discussions at the Conference and to contribute immediately their own ideas to these discussions.

Many organizations and individuals devoted months of hard work to plan, equip and coordinate the operations of the Center. The Conference staff would like to thank the following for their assistance in making the Center a reality:

Legislation

Support from the U.S. Congress and from several important congressional committees was a crucial factor in enactment of the legislation authorizing the White House Conference. The staff would like to express its gratitude to Congress and particularly to past and present members of the following committees:

U.S. Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources
Subcommittee on Education, Arts and the Humanities

U.S. Senate Appropriations Committee
Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health, Education and Welfare

U.S. House Committee on Education and Labor
Subcommittee on Select Education
Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education

U.S. House Appropriations Committee
Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health, Education and Welfare

Information Community Organizations

An important contribution to the success of the White House Conference on Library and Information Services came from thirty-nine organizations representing a wide range of professionals in the Nation's information community.

Leaders of these groups took part in planning sessions to determine their organizations' role in the Conference, to define their policy positions and to discuss methods they will use to help implement recommendations resulting from the Conference. The Conference planners would like to thank the American Society for Information Science for its help in organizing the planning sessions and the following groups for their generous participation:

American Association for the Advancement of Science
American Association of Law Libraries
American Chemical Society
American Council on Education
American Federation of Information Processing Societies
American Library Association
American Society for Information Science
American Society of Indexers

National Federation of Local Cable Programmers
National Micrographics Association
Society for Technical Communications
Society of American Archivists
Special Libraries Society

State Library Agencies

Planning for the White House Conference on Library and Information Services began more than two years before the national meeting opened. State and territorial library agencies throughout the Nation generously gave their time and assistance in helping to organize the pre-White House Conferences in the States and in cooperating with the staff in Washington.

The Illinois State Library and the State Library of Ohio loaned slides and film strip programs for use in many of the state conferences. The Conference planners would like to thank all of the state and territorial library agencies for their help in the many tasks involved in preparing for the meeting.

Receptions

Several organizations have given generously their expert assistance and their facilities in making possible the receptions for delegates and other official participants in the White House Conference. The Conference planners would like to thank the following organizations for their help:

American Library Association
Embassy of Australia
Embassy of Canada
Embassy of India
Embassy of the Ivory Coast
Library of Congress
Organization of American States
U.S. Department of State

"Be With A Book For A Day"

A nationwide campaign to increase public awareness of the White House Conference on Library and Information Services began last summer and is still under way.

The idea for the program, which uses the slogan, "Be With A Book For A Day," came from Frederic J. Glazer director of the West Virginia Library Commission. The Chief Officers of State Library Agencies are cosponsoring the effort. The Conference planners would like to thank Mr. Glazer and the state library officers for their work in launching the project.

Mr. Glazer coordinated the production and distribution of 30,000 posters and 50 million small stickers bearing a specially-designed emblem and the words, "Be With A Book For A Day." David Martin, an artist on the staff of the West Virginia Library Commission, designed the poster and the stickers.

The purpose of the project is to give people the opportunity to demonstrate their support for libraries by displaying the emblems and by carrying their favorite library books during the Conference.

Mr. Glazer credited the following individuals and organizations for assisting with planning, publicity or funds for the national campaign:

Baker and Taylor Company, New York
John N. Berry III, Editor-in-Chief of Library Journal

John Curley and Associates, South Yarmouth, Massachusetts
Demco Educational Corp., Madison, Wisconsin
Encyclopedia Brittanica, Chicago, Illinois
Encyclopedia Brittanica Educational Corp., Chicago, Illinois
Gaylord Brothers, Inc., Syracuse, New York
Tony Leisner, Quality Books Co., Northbrook, Illinois
Mainline Book Co., Edgemont, Pennsylvania
George Plimpton, Author and National Spokesperson for the campaign, New York
Governor John D. Rockefeller IV, West Virginia
Whitney North Seymour Jr., National Citizens Committee to Save Our Libraries, New York

Text and Layout:

The text of the Conference program book was written and edited by Charles Culhane of The White House Conference Staff. The page layout and design are the work of Tom Myers of Merkle Press, Inc.

Cover and Photographs:

The illustration on the front cover of the Conference program was designed by William J. Kircher & Associates, Inc. of Washington, D.C. The firm also designed the poster entitled "Bringing Information to People" which has been distributed widely to publicize the goals of the White House Conference.

Most of the photographs to illustrate the program book are the work of Chad Evans Wyatt, Staff Photographer for the White House Conference. Some photos came from other sources and the Conference staff would like to thank the following for providing pictures: Keith Jewell, Staff Photographer for the U.S. House of Representatives; New York Stock Exchange; United Nations.
